The concept linking the works by the artists present in Landscape as a Dream, is the impossibility of describing the beauty of nature due to its progressive disappearance or its transformation.

Art can do nothing but accept these changes and metamorphoses, these areas of passage that can no longer be delimited yet have become the typical places of our epoch, the sign of our times.

And the artists present in the show actually go in search of new narratives and tales, because the problem is no longer that of reproducing or investigating the extreme limits of our experience, but the more radical aim of rebuilding it for forming a new visual alphabet, one capable of unifying view and vision, interior and exterior, revelation and detection of places. They start with what is known in order to represent what is possible.
